Quarterly fund commentary

Greater China equity markets fell in Q4 as the rising uncertainty surrounding politics and policy in the US influenced investor flows into the region. In China, the government's efforts to cool down the property market also weighed on markets. Despite the pullback in equity markets, economic activity remained relatively solid in China, with retail sales and production continuing to show strength. The real estate and information technology sectors were the weakest performers, with these areas suffering from policy tightening and profit taking. Sectors that managed to gain were energy and materials as commodity prices continued to rise. In Hong Kong, market performance was similar to the Chinese equity market, with Hong Kong's real estate sector also facing policy tightening measures. Taiwanese equities declined by less given the underlying improvement in electronic products and machinery exports, especially to China and other countries in Asia. In terms of our investment strategy, we focus on selecting companies with sustainable leadership and competitive advantages using a purely bottom-up approach. Our preference is for private enterprises, as their interests are better aligned with shareholders, which has led to meaningful exposure in consumer-related sectors, such as consumer discretionary, consumer staples and internet services.
