Quarterly fund commentary

The third quarter was a decidedly "risk off" quarter as concerns about global growth, particularly in China, weighed on equity and bond markets. The US Federal Open Market Committee left short term interest rates unchanged in September. With weaker employment data out of the US and concerns about consumer and business confidence, we have pushed out our expectations for the beginning of policy normalisation, i.e., short term interest rate increases, to 2016. During the quarter, credit spreads widened across asset classes leading to higher yields and lower prices. Lower quality bonds across both developed and developing markets were hit particularly hard. Levels now appear to offer value, so we anticipate adding additional exposure to investment grade and high yield corporate fixed rate debt while reducing floating rate securities. We believe emerging markets (EM) face headwinds for growth given high levels of domestic debt and sustained low commodity prices, and so we are cautious on EM positioning. Growth weakness in China is likely to weigh on Asia generally, so our caution extends to Asian debt broadly.
