Quarterly fund commentary

On 06 July 2018, a Luxembourg-domiciled SICAV named Invesco Asia Infrastructure Fund was merged into the Invesco Asia Opportunities Equity Fund, a sub-fund within the same fund umbrella. Asia ex Japan equity markets ended the third quarter lower. The global macroeconomic backdrop remained challenging given the rising oil price, strengthening US dollar and escalating trade tensions. In China, following an initial round of tariffs imposed on US$50bn Chinese goods, the US raised tariffs on an additional US$200bn worth of imports, causing the market to worry that trade tensions might escalate further. Slower domestic economic growth was another concern that weighed on market performance. The most recent monthly data suggested that even though retail sales remained resilient, fixed asset investment continued to moderate due to a sharp deceleration in infrastructure investment, spurring the government to tilt policy towards a more proactive monetary and fiscal stance. In India, while the external environment was unfavourable, the domestic financial sector faced disruption after an infrastructure lender faced a series of defaults and credit downgrades. Other Asian equity markets outperformed the broader market given their solid fundamentals compared with other emerging markets. Our investment strategy is to take a selective approach with a strong focus on bottom-up stock opportunities. In terms of overall country allocation, the fund remains well-balanced, in our view, with a focus on opportunities in Greater China and India while being underweight in ASEAN equity markets relative to the reference index.
