Quarterly fund commentary

During the fourth quarter, Chinese authorities continued to ease their monetary and administration policies. Against this backdrop, the onshore short-term and long-term interest rates have declined by around 200 and 50 basis points respectively in last several months, resulting in multiple-year wide differentials between the Chinese onshore bond yields and offshore Chinese USD bond yields for similar maturities and credit profiles. In our view, the Chinese USD bonds are more attractive than the onshore Chinese bonds. We expect more monetary reserve requirement ratio cuts in China to lead to more liquidity releases. The domestic liquidity will likely cross the border to bid for Chinese USD bonds. We are overweight in the Chinese consumption sectors relative to reference index as they are benefited from recent household tax cuts in China. We are underweight in the Chinese export and technology sectors relative to reference index amid the US-China trade tensions. We are more cautious about India and Indonesia in the first quarter of 2019 ahead of their major elections. We see strong valuations in Asian high yielding bonds of short maturities of 1 to 3 years. Lastly, the monetary easing of the Chinese central bank is constructive for the Asian high yield bonds.

Risk Warnings

The value of investments and any income will fluctuate (this may partly be the result of exchange rate fluctuations) and investors may not get back the full amount invested. Debt instruments are exposed to credit risk which is the ability of the borrower to repay the interest and capital on the redemption date. Changes in interest rates will result in fluctuations in the value of the fund. The Fund may invest in a dynamic way across assets/asset classes, which may result in periodic changes in the risk profile, underperformance and/or higher transaction costs. As a large portion of the fund is invested in less developed countries, you should be prepared to accept significantly large fluctuations in the value of the fund. The fund may invest in contingent convertible bonds which may result in significant risk of capital loss based on certain trigger events. Investments in debt instruments which are of lower credit quality may result in large fluctuations in the value of the fund.
