Quarterly fund commentary

Emerging market (EM) local currency bonds returned -6.09% in the fourth quarter (USD total return), as measured by the JP Morgan GBI-EM Global Diversified Index. Returns were positive in local currency terms, however EM currencies sold off versus the US dollar (US$). US economic growth momentum, which was already strong, was bolstered by the outcome of the US election and in turn propelled the US$ to further strength and US Treasury bond yields higher for the quarter. Promises of fiscal stimulus and the backdrop of accommodative monetary policy led the US Federal Reserve to raise the Fed Funds Rate in the quarter with expectations for more in 2017. The backdrop for global growth remains muted, which is a headwind for EM economies that remain focused on exports. The economic rebalancing in China, away from fixed asset investment, adds to potential strains for EM economic growth. Interest rate cutting cycles remain in some countries, but concerns about currency weakness-led inflation have halted and even reversed rate cutting in some cases. Capital outflow-led currency weakness remains the dominant headwind for 2017.
