Quarterly fund commentary

Global emerging equity markets experienced a volatile quarter with losses being recorded in all regions. Starting with a sharp decline in commodity prices in July, which was pushed by concerns over the economic growth outlook for China as well as volatile trading conditions in Chinese equity markets added to the woes in other emerging equity markets. Furthermore, emerging equity markets tumbled as unexpected yuan devaluation stunned financial markets in August. In response, China cut interest rates to calm market nerves. Despite the move, doubts that the authorities had done enough to calm market conditions continued to sour sentiment. Consequentially, a combination of weakening Chinese data and inaction by the US Federal Reserve to hike US interest rates continued to unsettle the markets in September. Moreover, the perceived weakness in China put further downward pressure on commodity prices. Foreign exchange turbulence was another feature with many emerging market currencies hitting fresh lows versus the US dollar. Over the quarter, our stock selection model for emerging markets delivered average results and the portfolio performed basically in line with its reference index.
