Quarterly fund commentary

Although crude oil and natural gas prices averaged higher during the second quarter, they still remained approximately half what they were a year prior. Energy equities were among market laggards despite a many energy companies provided positive earnings surprises due to successful cost cutting measures. The fund outperformed its benchmark, the MSCI World Energy Index, primarily as a result of stock selection. Key relative contributors against the benchmark included security selection in the following industries: integrated oil & gas, oil & gas exploration & production and oil & gas equipment & services. An overweight position in oil & gas drilling, as well as an underweight position in the oil & gas storage & transportation industry, also contributed positively. Conversely, an underweight position in oil & gas refining & marketing detracted from relative performance against the benchmark. Corporate capital expenditure budgets, on average, have been approximately 20-30% lower for 2015. This decline, we believe, will equate to eventual lower production. However, this may take some time. We continue to take this opportunity to enhance the portfolio by strengthening core holdings and adding new and, in our view, quality companies that we felt were previously unreasonably valued.
