Quarterly fund commentary

For much of 2016, government bond markets have led the broader corporate bond market higher. However, over the past three months, led by US Treasuries government bond prices have started to fall. In turn this also led to weakness in the broader corporate bond market. A key influence was the election of Donald Trump. The President elect's plans for fiscal expansion raised inflation expectations and cemented the markets view that interest rates would be hiked before the end of the year. As a result, there was very little market impact from the 25 basis point hike made in December. The rise in yields, particularly in longer dated bonds, provides a more profitable interest rate environment for the banks, which outperformed the broader corporate bond market. Equity markets rallied over the three months as investor's regained confidence amid increased talk of fiscal stimulus being used to stimulate economic growth. The fund remains defensively positioned with a relatively high allocation to cash and liquid government bonds (34% as at 31 December 2016). The fund's allocation to non-financial high yield bonds is focused on high quality companies that we consider unlikely to default. At a sector level, we have thought for some time that the best investment opportunities lie in financials, particularly subordinated bank bonds. Through the equity allocation, we are able to benefit from an additional and potentially diversifying income stream and maintain an allocation of around 35%.
