Quarterly fund commentary

US politics took centre stage in the fourth quarter of 2016. The new administration brings the prospect of a business-friendly environment; however, it is too early to tell whether campaign rhetoric translates into policy reality. The US Federal Reserve confirmed market expectations with a decision to raise interest rates by 0.25%. Equity volatility was lower, on average, for the quarter while the US dollar reached its highest level for the year. As a result, gold mining equities delivered negative returns for the quarter and the price of bullion averaged 9% lower at $1,218 per troy ounce. The fund underperformed its benchmark, the Philadelphia Gold & Silver index, during the quarter. Security selection and an underweight exposure in copper mining equities, as well as security selection in precious metals & minerals mining equities, were detractors from relative performance. Out-of-benchmark exposure in diversified metals & mining equities, together with security selection and underweight exposure to gold mining equities, were beneficial. Ancillary cash and out-of-benchmark gold bullion holdings also helped relative returns. We believe uncertainty in the global equity markets may cause further volatility in gold and precious metals prices. We believe the current landscape of geopolitical tensions, weak economic growth prospects and negative real interest rates bodes well for gold investment.
