Quarterly fund commentary

During the fourth quarter, Chinese authorities continued to ease their monetary and administration policies. Against this backdrop, we expect Chinese yuan short-term and long-term interest rates to decline further positively impacting Chinese bond prices. The weakening of crude oil prices and commodities prices will keep inflation benign, being constructive for the Renminbi bonds. Within the portfolio, we are overweight in the Chinese consumption sectors relative to reference index, as they are benefitting from recent household tax cuts in China. We are underweight in the Chinese export, telecom, media and technology sectors relative to reference index amid the US-China trade tensions.

The performance period shown here starts on the last day of the first indicated month and ends on the last day of the last indicated month.

Risk Warnings

The value of investments and any income will fluctuate (this may partly be the result of exchange rate fluctuations) and investors may not get back the full amount invested. Debt instruments are exposed to credit risk which is the ability of the borrower to repay the interest and capital on the redemption date. Changes in interest rates will result in fluctuations in the value of the fund. As a large portion of the fund is invested in less developed countries, you should be prepared to accept significantly large fluctuations in the value of the fund. The fund may invest in contingent convertible bonds which may result in significant risk of capital loss based on certain trigger events. The fund invests in a limited number of holdings and is less diversified. This may result in large fluctuations in the value of the fund. Investments in debt instruments which are of lower credit quality may result in large fluctuations in the value of the fund.
