Quarterly fund commentary

Chinese capital outflows have eased and the renminbi (RMB) has stabilized against the US dollar (USD), while economic reform momentum remains strong. Chinese authorities continue to tighten regulations covering shadow banking and local government financing activities in a transparent way. We expect capital allocation efficiency in China to improve, which is generally positive for RMB denominated bonds. Our strategy of taking lower interest rate risk than the reference index and maintaining an average bond credit rating of investment grade has successfully helped the fund achieve strong returns since the start of 2017. We have been increasing exposure to high yield bonds (rated below BBB/Baa), which we feel are a good and improving credit risk (the risk of non-repayment, which we feel is diminishing). We have reduced exposures to Chinese real estate property sector in anticipation of tighter housing policy in China. The fund will continue to invest in Chinese USD denominated bonds with RMB currency hedging. We believe this strategy expands the investment universe, and enhances diversification and potentially yields.

Risk Warnings

The value of investments and any income will fluctuate (this may partly be the result of exchange rate fluctuations) and investors may not get back the full amount invested. Debt instruments are exposed to credit risk which is the ability of the borrower to repay the interest and capital on the redemption date. Changes in interest rates will result in fluctuations in the value of the fund. As a large portion of the fund is invested in less developed countries, you should be prepared to accept significantly large fluctuations of the value of the fund. The fund may invest in contingent convertible bonds which may result in significant risk of capital loss based on certain trigger events. The fund invests in a limited number of holdings and is less diversified, and therefore this may result in large fluctuations of the value of the fund. The fund may hold a large amount of debt instruments which are of lower credit quality and may result in large fluctuations in the value of the fund.
