Quarterly fund commentary

The year ended with confidence among many economic commentators and capital market participants at high levels. Recent economic data confirmed the health of key US, Eurozone and Chinese economies. Meanwhile, inflation levels proved supportive of slow monetary policy normalization. In turn, this is offering support to investment risk appetite. Listed real estate performance was led by European REITs, but all regions of the world showed positive performance. Performance in the US, Europe and Australia was boosted by a spate of merger and acquisition activity, centered on the mall segment. Global listed real estate ends the period priced at an average small discount to net asset value, which is slightly wider than long term average levels. Growth prospects for earnings and dividends in 2018 lie in mid-single digits, with an average dividend yield opportunity just below 4%. Fundamentals for real estate around the world remain generally supportive, with some pockets of weakness in obvious sectors, such as secondary retail, and a few markets, especially in the US, where over-supply is denting growth opportunities. Investor appetite for prime quality private real estate assets remains strong. Listed companies are tending to continue to be net sellers of their assets into market demand.
