Quarterly fund commentary

All Pacific equity markets ended the quarter lower with the exception of Australia on the back of global trade tensions. This, and fears that the Federal Reserve may increase interest rates more than anticipated, contributed to US dollar strength which negatively affected ASEAN markets in particular. The Korean market underperformed despite a positive inter-Korea summit which saw South and North Korea agree to end the war between the two sides. Elsewhere, slowing domestic growth momentum in China and global trade uncertainty led to the equity market finishing in negative territory. In Japan, the market declined with investors tending to be cautious about increasing risk. Finally, the Australia market was driven higher by energy stocks. We seek to invest in companies whose share prices are substantially below our estimate of fair value. In Asia, the fund has a significant exposure to dominant Korean and Taiwanese technology companies, as well as Chinese internet companies. Elsewhere, we have a large exposure in South Korea reflects our belief that a focus on corporate governance is likely to see more companies adopt shareholder friendly policies. We added a new position in a Korean insurance company which we believe has a strong capital position and solid earnings outlook. In Japan, we have a slight overweight position versus the MSCI Pacific Index where the fund has a more balanced position across economically sensitive and relatively defensive areas of the market.
