Quarterly fund commentary

China's equity market rose again in Q4 as confidence in corporate earnings continued to lift market sentiment. The market continued to benefit from positive earnings upgrades. Economic growth remained stable, with the official manufacturing PMI and trade data pointing towards healthy domestic production and robust external demand. Retail sales remained resilient. The 19th Party Congress saw a smooth transition of leadership, paving the way for further reforms. In particular, we expect containing financial risks and supply-side reform to remain high-priority within government policy going forward. Amidst a favourable macro backdrop, we expect Chinese companies to deliver earnings growth of 17.9% in 2017, compared to -9.4% in 2016. As for sector performance, the healthcare and consumer staples sectors led market gains, which is consistent with our positive view on their long-term growth potentials. In terms of investment strategy, our bottom-up approach to stock selection focuses on companies with sustainable leadership and competitive advantages. This has led to more exposure towards consumer sectors where we find better stock opportunities. We believe the government will continue to pursue policies on urbanization and social welfare that support consumption growth.
